Systems Analysis and Thinking

Perceive and comprehend your situation and objectives as a complex system that is a part of other multiple systems.

Identify every factor that will drive the desired state of your particular system.

Control all of those factors within a range such that the end state of your system is compatible with your desired outcome.

First Response

• Outcome—stabile flow of oxygenated blood to the head and the heart vs determination and repair of the injury.

• The outcome was primarily driven by our plumbing skills—fluid and gas.
